

Are you ready for VGCC?

Yes, I am

- I am considered the person responsible for my education at postsecondary schools. No one will "hold my hand" or ask me if I need help. However, faculty and staff will be happy to help me once I ask for help.
- I can describe, out loud, my own disability.
- I have copies of all test results related to the diagnosis of my disability and a recent complete diagnostic evaluation report.
- I understand and can discuss the content of the reports concerning my disability history and diagnosis.
- I have practiced with and am familiar with the accommodations I plan to use at VGCC.
- I use special accommodations to take tests. I plan to make arrangements to use these same accommodations when I take my placement tests so that my scores will accurately reflect what I know.
- I plan to meet with the Counselor/Advisor of Disability Services at VGCC.
- I am aware that most postsecondary schools do not have "resource rooms," classroom assignments adapted only for students with disabilities, or reduced program standards and requirements.
- I can describe to a reader or notetaker how they can be most helpful to me. I can decide whether their help is meeting my needs. I know I need to let them know if my needs are not being met.
- I plan to apply for special assistance at postsecondary schools in a timely fashion.
- I have the skills or will get help to learn the skills about time management, notetaking, listening, test – taking strategies, and library use.
- I have asked questions about receiving financial support for my education by talking to financial aid.

We know our students have the ability to succeed at Vance-Granville Community College and in life. And we know the steps that it takes to assist our students with disabilities. It is our goal to help them achieve their highest potential. Plan now along with your counselor or EC teacher to start on the right track. You can succeed, at Vance-Granville Community College looks forward to being a part of your success. Now, are you ready for VGCC?
